One of the finest television and film actors, Steven Hill is dead at 94. Steven portrayed the character of attorney Adam Schiff on the hit show "Law and Order", created by Dick Wolf. Steven died at the age of 94 in Monsey, N.Y., a suburb in Rockland County, New York. After a 23-year hiatus from the small screen, Steven Hill was cast on the air with the "Law and Order" for ten years, bringing fans back for each and every episode. The TV series had an amazing run and continues to this day with one of the most loyal viewership ratings in TV history.

Loyal fans still watch the episodes highlighting current crime stories that are first initiated at the police investigative "Who did it?" stage, all the way to courtroom prosecution scenes leading to a conviction or perhaps freedom.

At the age of 44, Steven Hill was cast as Daniel Briggs a covert mission's operator in the television show "Mission Impossible" from the 1960's. Patrick J. White, the author of the book The Complete Mission: Impossible Dossier mentions that because of Steven's religious requirements. Steven refused to work on Fridays to observe the Jewish Sabbath. The staff at the show found him difficult to work with, or at least according to what was written in the book. Born in Seattle by Russian Immigrant parents, Steven Hill was consistently furthering his career. He was in over twenty films. He played the Manhattan District attorney in the movie "Legal Eagles" in 1986, starring Robert Redford, directed by Ivan Reitman, and written by Jim Cash and Jack Epps Jr. Hill's first film was in the 1950's- "A Lady Without Passport" with Hedy Lamarr. Other film credits are Yentl, Brighton Beach Memoirs released in 1983, White Palace in 1990 and The Firm in 1993.

"Law and Order notably had 196 nominations, and forty-four wins, including Golden Globe Awards and Emmy Awards. Steven Hill's legacy will certainly be missed. We have not received information on the cause of death, but the actor was known to suffer multiple health issues.
